

A lighting path in a floral park

(Orléans, France)

In the context of the city of Orleans lighting masterplan, we were commissioned to develop the illumination masterplan of the floral park. Closed to the public under normal circumstances, the park is open a few nights each summer. The lighting is an attraction in itself. During those nights the public is invited to walk in the dark, with lanterns or flashlights, according to the set light and darkness which limits it. Total darkness in some areas is a major issue. The other tool, light, subtly plays the staging of the landscape or objects, such as the strengthening of certain pathways to frame, limiting the visitors ambulation.
